WHO Kate Winslet WHERE A Tudor estate dating to the time of Henry VIII, and later a pebble beach near the star's home in West Sussex WHAT HAPPENED The Oscar winner proved to be an expert multitasker, reviewing the script for her upcoming Steve Jobs film as she was getting her hair and nails done. But when husband Ned Rocknroll and then-13-month-old son Bear stopped by for a visit, she transitioned into full-on mummy mode.

You Asked, Kate Answered

Of all your movies, which one is your favorite?

-JESSICA AMODIO, Jericho, N.Y.

A Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind is my favorite film, but my favorite experience was in Heavenly Creatures. It was an incredible stroke of luck to be playing a lead role at age 17.

LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT

We wouldn't be surprised if we spot Winslet wearing this lilac-print Michael Kors frock in the near future. "I need this in my life," she said when she saw it on one of the seven racks we had on set.

SIPS AND SNACKS

In between takes, Winslet drank Yorkshire black tea with a dash of Oatly organic oat milk. For lunch she nibbled on a zucchini and radicchio salad with lemon-and-olive oil dressing.

WRAPPED AROUND HER FINGER

The actress was drawn to these vibrant single- and double-finger rings, perfect for our annual color issue.

THROWBACK! HER FIRST INSTYLE COVER SHOOT

In October 1999, the Titanic star sported a cropped cut that was a departure from her character's long red hair. "It was damaged from the water scenes and re-dyeing it so many times," she told us. "My hairstylist and I cracked open a bottle of Champagne, and off it came."

MELISSA RAUCH

The Big Bang Theory actress bonded with senior editor Sharon Clott Kanter (above right) over petite problems. "I live at the tailor," says Rauch.

NIKKI REED

Reed cuddled with Orion, a furry friend who was up for adoption. On her finger? An Ashley Morgan cat ring that was auctioned for the ASPCA.

TONY REVOLORI

The Umrika actor got comfy chatting with senior editor Karen Levy. And he could use the rest—the next day he was at the SAG Awards in L.A.

WHAT I DID

December's "Breaking the Pattern" gave me the push I needed to test out my own bold, monochromatic look. My color of choice? Chartreuse! I wore my sweater backward to show off the mesh detail and finished with peeptoe booties for a touch of toughness.

WHAT I DID Since I'm petite, it's not easy for me to get away with certain looks, but the cropped top in August's Instant Style wasn't one of them. Pairing my H&M floral T with a high-waist maxiskirt actually makes me look taller.

Suisive first look at the preppy prints the iconic Palm Beach label Lilly Pulitzer made just for Target

"Life's a party—dress like it!" the late designer Lilly Pulitzer famously said. This month, just in time for your busy spring social calendar, the fête is heading to Target as the label synonymous with relaxed resort glamour partners with the retailer for one of Target's largest collaborations yet. The 250 sunny pieces are instant moodlifters: raffia beach bags, striped towels, neon glassware, giraffe-charm jewelry, eye-popping makeup, and super-adorbs mommy-andme clothes. Even a hammock is Lilly-fied! "This is all supposed to make you smile, and it's to be enjoyed during the most fun times of your life," says Jane Schoenborn, Pulitzer's VP, who worked with a team of designers on the collab. And if the punchy patterns aren't enough to make you grin, the prices will: The line starts at two bucks. Now that's a true Pulitzer prize. -G.L.

Flutes of bubbly and a buzz of awards-show anticipation greet guests as they stream into the sixthfloor suite of the Chateau Marmont for an intimate pre-Golden Globes soirée in honor of The Theory of Everything. "My theme song right now is Meghan Trainor's 'Lips Are Movin," jokes the man of the hour, Eddie Redmayne.

8:32 P.M. As Redmayne, with wife Hannah Bagshawe, bids his adieus, he tells us his own theory of everything about Hollywood: "When it's good, it's extraordinary. When it's bad, get out of town." If that's true, the star won't be leaving anytime soon. —CARITA RIZZO

THE THEORY OF (NOT EATING) EVERYTHING

Most guests couldn't resist the addictive appetizers from Chateau Marmont's famous kitchen, like hummus-stuffed cherry tomatoes and caprese-salad cups. Redmayne, however, says he has his stomach set on dinner downstairs: "I have a new ritual that whenever I'm at the Chateau, I eat spaghetti Bolognese. I can't recommend it more highly."

mily Deschanel has seen her share of bodies. As forensic anthropologist Dr. Temperance Brennan on the hit series Bones (now in its tenth season), Deschanel may be accustomed to cadavers, but there's one place she won't tolerate them: on her plate. A vegan since an early age, Deschanel doesn't shout her meateating indictments from the rooftops. "I don't go around preaching if I'm not asked," she said. "But if the subject is brought up, I like to talk about it." Last year, Deschanel joined the board of Farm Sanctuary, a nonprofit that operates three shelters—two in California and one in New York—for rescued farm animals. "When you spend time with animals there," she said of the cows, sheep, realize they aren't that different from the cats and dogs we call friends." You grew up in Los Angeles, which isn't exactly rural. How did you develop a concern for farm animals? We moved around a lot when I was a kid. My father, Caleb Deschanel, is a cinematographer and director. When I was 10, we moved to the Seychelles, off the coast of Somalia, while he directed Crusoe. I remember hearing pigs being slaughtered behind where we lived. I never forgot it: They didn't want to be killed. Compared with most pigs in the United States, though, those guys most likely had it pretty good. True, they could probably run around, which is more than I can say for most pigs grown for food here. The good news is that meat consumption is going down in the United States. Of course, it's rising in other places, like China.

Eating meat used to be a status symbol here. Now not eating meat is. I've been a vegan for more than 20 years. Now I'm in my second pregnancy and still vegan. So many people think they need to eat meat and dairy products to survive and be healthy, but that's not the case.

There are ethical, financial, and health arguments to be made for eating less meat. But > Farm Sanctuary seems focused on encouraging people to get eye to eye with their steaks before they're steaks. It's really a life-changing experience to interact with these animals. I didn't realize how individual each sheep or chicken could be.

They have their own chicken dramas.

[Laughs] It's a regular Downton Abbey. Farm Sanctuary helps you realize that the steak you're about to eat once had a name and personality.

OLIVIER ROUSTEING ON THE RECORD

With youth comes fearlessness, as this selfassured designer demonstrates with pizzazz.

Q You were only 25 years old when you were given the reins, so how did you know what to do?

A When you start, you have some doubts and fears, but you grow up at the same time that your collection matures. What helped me was my honesty, my sincerity, and my youth. I knew exactly what I wanted to do, and I do more and more so today. I'm not trying to be someone else.

Q Is your perspective on fashion ever affected by your age?

A My point of view is about listening to the new generation. I'm into pop culture and what's happening in this world. I don't need to be stuck in the '70s or '50s or whatever decade is trendy. Sometimes I think that's why celebrities like Balmain so much, because it looks fresh, and they can actually feel young. They come because they want to be part of this Balmain world.

Q My favorite was Shailene Woodley at the MTV Movie Awards. Who excites you the most?

A I was so happy because Shailene was able to show a different side of her personality. Wearing Balmain is like an exercise because you have to push yourself. When Kendall Jenner and Kim Kardashian arrived at a party in Paris with all of my models, they looked like soldiers from a fashion army. It's not only about party clothes but also about giving a message of strength. And I love when Rihanna tries on clothes in my office.

Q How would you describe yourself as a person?

A I believe in strong women. I love glamour and fabulousness, which is obvious. I love twisting whatever is around me in the culture. I love diversity. I'm of mixed race, adopted from an orphanage. My parents are white, and I'm in a French luxury house. I bring all of these things to my fashion and my girls. And I feel more powerful for it because I'm not scared.

Q You are also unafraid to push the boundaries of sex. Why is that a good look?

A There is something very confident about wearing sexy clothes. But it's really about the attitude and mentality. I invite women to believe in themselves, no matter the body shape or where they come from. But if you don't wear Balmain with confidence, you will look ridiculous.

Q That makes it easy to forget that Balmain was once designed by Oscar de la Renta. Do you ever look back?

A The archives are very important. Pierre Balmain is always in my mind when I sketch. I have always believed in his vision: structured shoulder pads, waists defined with belts, and sharp tailoring. And I'm in love with Oscar de la Renta's archives. You can see the craftsmanship and the richness in his work. I had the chance to meet him in his studio in New York, and after that I appreciated his clothes even more. So beautiful and romantic but at the same time so powerful.

Q Why did you decide to cast Kim and Kanye in your ads?

A When I was young, I never had a reference of a mixedethnicity couple. Today they are among the most talkedabout people, and North is one of the most beautiful babies on the planet. They represent a family for the new world.

Q If you had a theme song, what would it be?

A "Black or White," by Michael Jackson. It doesn't matter if you're black or white.

Spring AWAKENING

One way Rousteing wins the affection of legions of models and celebrities is by creating clothes that demand to be noticed. "I could never do an entirely black collection," he says. "I need to have color too because I want to catch the eyes of the public, and that's what colors are for." Another way he charms them is by never being overly precious with his pricey designs, as seen below in his spring campaign. "Don't think Balmain is only for the stage," he says. "It's about a cool girl eating a burger and actually having fun with her friends."

ask DIANE VON FURSTENBERG

"Color is power. It expresses the mood, the time, the woman. On days when you wake up feeling dull, throwing on just a touch can somehow make you feel happier and more optimistic. Strong hues are my signature, and they are to be worn with pride. As I always say, my muse is a woman on the go, breezing through customs with nothing to declare but colors and a confident attitude."

Any tips on how to pull off a monochrome outfit? —andrea t., san jose, calif.

First, find a tone that makes you look amazing—like the best version of yourself. If you force anything, you run the risk of looking like a clown. And don't worry too much about matching: Play with light and dark variations instead. If you're wearing a navy skirt, try something in a pastel blue on top. Just remember to keep the pieces relatively simple.

I'm planning my wedding and would like some advice about bridesmaids' dresses. I want a shade that's unique but steers far from tacky. —ALBA M., SAN ANTONIO

Why not shift the focus from finding the perfect shade to letting your bridesmaids show their personality? You could pick one dress style, for example, and let each of them choose their own color, or one color and they can choose their own styles. The bottom line is to think of them as much as you would yourself, because remember, bridesmaids often meet their future husbands at weddings!

> I love colorblocking—the brighter, the better—but I never know what shoes work best. Thoughts? —SHELLY S., KNOXVILLE, TENN.

I generally like to go for something slightly unexpected. You have to have that twist. So if you've got a rigid, colorblocked outfit, maybe you opt for floral heels. Or if the look is feminine, go with a boot that will give it some edge. This kind of balance—the yin and yang—is essential.

How can I do black and white without seeming boring? —STELLA P., GARDEN CITY, N.Y.

This combo really comes to life with little bursts of bold hues—it's a DVF staple! Work in some zing with accessories: a bag, belt, shoe ... You can't lose.

n this loud pub in Central London's Soho, Michiel Huisman might be the only man not shouting. As the striking actor settles into a corner booth, surveying the sea of rowdies, he mutters in his slightly Dutch-accented English, "How will we hear each other?" He orders a glass of rosé wine and ponders the menu. "I eat everything, unlike most f—ing actors," he says with a grin. Huisman has just come from dubbing lines for The Age of Adaline, a film out this month that will cement Huisman's status as Hollywood heartthrob. In this follow-up to last year's well-received Wild, in which he steamed up Reese Witherspoon's tent, he plays Ellis Jones, a man so dashing he lures an immortal woman (Adaline Bowman, played by Blake Lively) into mortality. But if he's débuting as a silver-screen leading man, Huisman has had a long run smoldering on the small one. His recurring roles as Sonny on HBO's Treme, as Cal on the hit sci-fi show Orphan Black, and as Liam McGuinnis on Nashville have turned Huisman into something of an old hand at the TV game. And that was before he starred as Daario Naharis in the behemoth that is Game of Thrones.

Not only is Huisman the quietest man at the pub, he's also the best dressed. He's quickly mastered the fashion demands that accompany stardom. Huisman is wearing a luxuriously soft gray marled sweater, which he sheepishly admits was a gift he received after appearing opposite supermodel Gisele Bündchen in the latest Chanel No. 5 perfume campaign. "One minute the casting director was checking my availability, the next I'm being flown out to work with Baz Luhrmann," he says, rubbing the ruffled beard that gives his handsome looks a rugged quality. "It was a blast."

Looking over your résumé, I wonder if there has ever been a TV show you haven't appeared on.

I went from Treme for four seasons, which filmed about eight months of the year, to Nashville. Treme is gritty, raw. Nashville is country music and glamour. I'm lucky because in Nashville, I got to collaborate with one of the best actresses on TV, Connie Britton.

And now Game of Thrones.

Yes, now Daario on Game of Thrones. When you work on a show that's already so well established, it can be hard not to think about that when you take on the role. But with Game of Thrones, once you're on set, the cast is so professional; everyone is about the work and the story. Then you go home and think, Oh my god, I just shot a scene in Game of Thrones!

Is it true that you lied about being able to play piano to get the Treme job?

I did. I lied. But the thing is, I had musical experience. I played guitar in a band in the Netherlands and under my own name for years. We did typical singersongwriter, pop-rock stuff. So I had a foundation to work on. But I wouldn't recommend trying to learn piano in two months if you have no experience. My wife [fellow actress Tara Elders, whom Huisman married in 2008] and I have a home in New Orleans now. When we go back, I head out to the bars and play in bands, but I can only pull off boogie-woogie and blues. It drives my wife crazy. The other day she packed me off to my daughter's piano teacher to learn something classical. You know what I learned? "Jingle Bells."

the LOOK MAN OF STYLE

What's it like being married to an actress? The best way to describe it is that we share everything. She helps me with every decision I have to make about work; she reads scripts and runs lines with me. So when I achieve something, I feel like it is our success, not mine alone.

How did you meet?

Our first kiss was onscreen. In 2003, I did a Dutch movie called Phileine Says Sorry. The scene was pretty horrible, actually. I played Phileine's boyfriend, an actor named Max. In the film I do an avant-garde version of Romeo and Juliet with lots of nudity. Phileine shows up at the première with her friend Lala, played by my wife. But to shoot that scene took a week-a week of being bare-naked on that stage—knowing that this beautiful girl was sitting there in the audience watching me. Awful. But I guess it all worked out in the end.

You've been acting since you were a kid. Is it something you always knew you wanted to pursue?

I once made the mistake of saying I was a child actor. It's technically true, but it sounds so ... wrong, you know? The best thing about it that I remember was that I worked with a dog called Pepper. He was one of the dogs who played Benji in the films from the 1980s, and I loved him so much. The animal handler was like, "You know he's about to retire. You could take him." I did. He was one cool dog.

In the very rare moments when you're not working, how do you relax?

When we have time off, we go back to the Netherlands, where we have a 19th-century farmhouse outside Amsterdam. What I really like to do is use my hands. I'm pretty bad at home improvements, but I like to fix stuff around the house. With an old farmhouse there's endless opportunity. I love tools. I just bought a Makita drill with lithium batteries. I don't know what that means or why that's good, but I love it. I might get a tool belt, but I don't want to push it just yet. ■

a MAN and HIS INSTRUMENTS

Whether he plays a Flemish troubadour or a boogie-woogie bluesman, Huisman always looks like a scruffy rock star—in fact he kind of is one.

Making the Dutch language roll off the tongue is a heavy lift, but as lead singer of the pop-rock band Fontane, Huisman managed to do it.

PIANO After faking his way through his audition, Huisman eventually learned to tickle the ivories as Sonny, a sideman in New Orleans, in Treme.

GUITAR In Nashville, Liam McGuinnis is equal parts riffing rake and heartthrob, not unlike other famed crooners such as Johnny Cash and Hank Williams.

BACK FROM the BRINK

Four years ago, John Galliano became the most reviled man in fashion. Now that he has been given a second chance, as creative director at Maison Margiela, it might be time for us to reconsider ashion loves nothing more than a comeback. Barely two years after photographs published in the British press in 2005 appeared to show Kate Moss using cocaine, which led several retailers to drop her from ad campaigns, she regained her spot at the top of the modeling heap and added a collection for Topshop to her résumé. In 2007, Naomi Campbell transformed her court-ordered community service into a fashion shoot, wearing designer clothes to and from her stint in the sanitation department. Now she stages runway events for charities. Calvin Klein, after disrupting a Knicks game in 2003, turned his life around and spent several years designing one of the most spectacular houses in the Hamptons.

BY ERIC WILSON

Oh, how the mighty have fallen. And oh, how quickly they have risen again. But as much as we sometimes love to root for underdogs and dark horses—don't get me started on Lindsay Lohan-there is one designer whose restoration to favored status is not a fait accompli. Nor can we assume his future will go so easily. Of course, I am speaking of John Galliano's recent return to the spotlight, now that he is working again, as the creative director at Maison Margiela.

The central question raised by his comeback, which happened surprisingly fast following the drunken outburst of anti-Semitic and racist remarks that ended his career at Christian Dior in 2011, is whether fashion, and the world at large, is ready to forgive him for that very dark episode. Certainly, no one will forget. So how will this ever work?

Galliano's collection was an ode to the oddness of Margiela.

A NEW CHAPTER

On January 12, at teatime in London, Galliano presented his first couture—or "artisanal," in the parlance of the house—collection for Margiela, the quirky but influential label founded by the reclusive Belgian designer Martin Margiela in the late 1980s. Margiela, who quietly retired in 2009, is considered one of the greatest and most enigmatic designers of his generation. Although his ideas were often bizarre—"fur" coats made of wigs, blazers deconstructed to expose the interiors-they were embedded with fascinatingly complex commentary about fashion consumption. It seemed an odd destination for Galliano, whose work, while irreverent, mostly seemed to fit a more romantic (and classic red carpet) ideal.

By and large, his efforts to create a new look that married their two styles, expressing himself while remaining reverential toward Margiela, were well received. The first outfit appeared to pay tribute to a famous vest design by Margiela from 1997. Margiela's was cut from a dressmaker's mannequin; Galliano's was an intentionally crude-looking beige vest with a trim of toy cars, which also recalled Margiela's appreciation for using found objects in design. We saw the customary Margiela kookiness of elaborate headgear (one look could be described as a steampunk version of a Mexican death mask) and a finale of designs presented the way they were in their earlier toile states. Then came classic touches of Galliano in the deep fold of a gown or a sublimely monastic red dress with a delicate bow on the back of its neatly sliced neckline.

A DIFFERENT ENDING

At the very least, the show was a reminder of Galliano's undeniable talent, but also, perhaps. emblematic of his lack of self-awareness. Shirley Bassey belting out "Big Spender" on the soundtrack did not exactly telegraph contrition. And unlike Margiela, Galliano is known for making a spectacle of himself on his own runways (he once dressed as an astronaut). This time, he took his bow in an anonymous white lab coat, the customary uniform of all Margiela employees. It seemed a bit strange, and a very big gamble for Renzo Rosso, the chief executive of Diesel Group, which acquired Margiela in 2002.

"It was interesting that John didn't use his own money to start something small but chose to be bound by the codes of someone else," says Dana Thomas, author of Gods and Kings: The Rise and Fall of Alexander McQueen and John > Galliano, a new book chronicling the many parallels between the two designers and their undoings. "It could be a moment of insecurity.

He might not be completely sure of his creative voice."

Meanwhile, there's a palpable sense of happiness within the industry that Galliano is back at work. which could not have happened had his core supporters not helped him take those steps. Two years ago, he tested the waters with a guest residency in the studio of Oscar de la Renta, resulting in a fascinating collection, but one that some

SHOWSTOPPERS

Some fashion critics argue that the subdued Margiela and the outlandish Galliano are more similar than meets the eye. One thing's for sure: They share an appreciation for theater.

MARGIELA

GALLIANO

Margiela, the master of illusion, blended a bodysuit with a bikini (spring 2007). Galliano's trick was to turn couture on its ear at Dior (spring 1997).

Margiela crafted humble objects into unique designs (spring 2009), while Galliano favored lavish gestures, like big swags on dresses (spring 1998).

An example of Margiela's subtle wit was a "fur" coat made of wigs (spring 2009). Galliano's couture riff on homeless Parisians fell flat (spring 2000).

customers and retailers refused to buy. It seemed then that Galliano's name was poison.

Flash forward to the Screen Actors Guild Awards on January 25, when Jennifer Aniston became the first A-lister since the uproar to wear Galliano, a deep-cut gold dress from his signature collection for 1998, on the red carpet. And there wasn't much to-do. Not even on Fashion Police, where the E! critics made no mention of Galliano's past. On February 8, Sophie Hunter wore a Maison Margiela gown at the BAFTAs in London, the same night Rihanna performed at the Grammys in a Margiela tux. Hollywood's stamp of approval, as much as anything else, suggests it might be the right moment for the designer to move forward and redeem himself.

His actions will remain part of his legacy. So too will whatever comes next.

THE FALL Galliano was convicted in 2011 of making anti-Semitic insults during a public rant. He was fired from Dior.

THE RETURN After treatment for alcoholism and seeking amends, he took a tentative step forward by working with Oscar de la Renta in 2013.

THE FUTURE After his first Margiela show, some fans are beginning to forgive him.

Bank on bright color Neutrals may always work, but man, can they get boring. Deneuve opted for an eye-popping red instead with this Louis Vuitton dress. She let the siren shade speak for itself, keeping jewelry minimal and leaning on leather stripes to bring the flash. Most important? She picked a simple A-line silhouette that tempers the high-impact hue. The effect is bold, sexy, and self-possessed.

Baby your skin A radiant glow is key to looking healthy (and a few years younger). @NJAEclectic How can I look chic in the rain without resorting to a traditional khaki trench? I want to make more of a statement, #AskInStyle @InStyle Avoid cutesy at all costs. Instead, opt for intriguing hues and hightech flourishes. For a coat, start with your favorite primary color, and then go two shades lighter or darker. Take the blue jacket below, for example: The bulk of it is somewhere between teal and robin's-egg, but it looks downright futuristic thanks to the polyurethane material and utilitarian details. When choosing wellies, stick to sophisticated designs (no daisies, please), such as this Mondrian-style pattern. And you can't go wrong with a clear umbrella sometimes making no statement is the biggest statement of all.

BEAUTY DO THEY REALLY WORK?

detoxitying BUDY

HOW IT WORKS Mix the untreated green illite clay (from volcanic peaks in France) with half a cup of water and—poof!—you've got a skin-soothing mask that can suck up pore-clogging oil and grime.

HOW GREEN IT IS There's nothing in that pouch but earth itself

THE PRO SAYS "This product is why God invented the spa," jokes N.Y.C. dermatologist Cybele Fishman. "You have to use filtered water, a nonmetal spoon to mix it, and worry about it potentially clogging your drain? Come on!" While the amount of work seems "ridiculous," Dr. Fishman does see benefits in the product's oil-hoovering abilities. "It could help zap chest and back pimples. I actually recommend claybased masks to my acne-prone patients."

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS You'll need a mirror and some alone time. "I covered my entire body, which was dry and scaly post-winter, with the pudding-like mask," says our tester. Unable to easily move as the stuff dried, "I just stood in the tub and zoned out for 15 minutes." After she sponged off with a wet loofah, her skin "felt hydrated, soft, and renewed." An admittedly "patient" person, she thinks "it's a relaxing, pampering ritual." While she didn't need to make a Drano run, the mask left "sediment in my tub that was hard to remove," says another tester.

HOW IT WORKS This roll-on is loaded with natural ingredients and antimicrobial agents like citric acid and witch hazel to target the odor-causing bacteria that feed on your sweat.

HOW GREEN IT IS The ingredients in the mix look solid and naturally derived, says New Jersey cosmetic chemist Ni'Kita Wilson. Absent from this formula: aluminum, a sweat-stopping ingredient used in many underarm products. The metal is a red flag for some folks who've read that it could be linked to breast cancer. (The National Cancer Institute has reported no conclusive research connecting the use of antiperspirants or deodorants to the development of the disease.)

THE PRO SAYS Tapioca soaks up oil, and citric acid helps create a pH level that's like kryptonite to odor-causing bacteria, says Wilson. The results? "At the end of my day, I didn't smell bad."

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS Feel free to break out your LBDs: "This deodorant goes on clear, and doesn't leave residue when it dries." After a series of stress tests ("a first date, a weight-training class, a 12-hour day"), our tester reports that "there was no odor."

BEAUTY DO THEY REALLY WORK?

HOW IT WORKS The plant-based tool becomes positively pillowy when wet, providing gentle, oil-absorbing exfoliation.

HOW GREEN IT IS The root fibers come from the Asian konjac plant. Infused with green clay, "this sponge is about as natural as you can get," says Wilson.

THE PRO SAYS She prefers the sebumsucking clay over other oil-zapping ingredients like salicylic acid, "which can sometimes strip skin," Dr. Fishman says. Overall, it's an effective method for daily sloughing.

THE INSTYLE GUINEA

PIG SAYS "I loaded the sponge with my regular cleanser, and my face, which is pretty oily in the T-zone, felt really clean after washing," our tester says. You should buy a fresh one every two or three months. "but I wanted a new one after a few weeks. It just looked misshapen,

HOW IT WORKS The lotion relies heavily on 6 percent titanium dioxide and 6 percent zinc oxide to block sun rays from baby (and grown-up) skin.

HOW GREEN IT IS The sunscreen and its packaging are free of parabens, phthalates, and formaldehyde-releasing fragrance. Dermatologist and brand creator Amy Kim also kept peanuts, dairy, and soy out of the mix.

THE PRO SAYS "It's cosmetically elegant, easy to rub in, and has green-tea extract, which has been found to add photo protection," says Dr. Fishman. "My only quibble is that 10 percent zinc might have increased the SPF to 40. But this is definitely going to be used in my house."

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS You've got to rub it in well. But once it's settled, it's not sticky or stinky, and it leaves just the faintest cast on medium-brown skin.

Baby Pibu Baby Sunscreen, $24; baby pibu.com.

three-ingredient EXFOLIATOR

HOW IT WORKS Organic flour and sea salts absorb oil and round up superficial dead skin cells that are totally harshing your glow.

HOW GREEN IT IS Completely. There's literally nothing else here besides oat flour, almond flour, and salt. The Brooklyn-based brand isn't exaggerating when it claims, "It's pure kitchen-cabinet awesomeness."

THE PRO SAYS While the abbreviated ingredients list is admirable, Dr. Fishman's own face felt "tight and dry" after using the scrub. "Sugar might have been gentler." If your skin isn't particularly sensitive, you might love it. "The salt dissolves pretty quickly when you mix it with water," Wilson says.

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS "The soft, soothing mixture left my skin just as smooth as it gets after using an at-home chemical peel pad," says our seasoned scrubber.

DO YOU SPEAK

We're not trying to decipher every beautyproduct label on the market here. But to help you understand (and shop) the products on these pages, we worked with Ni'Kita Wilson to define key terms.

NATURAL

We're calling out products made with botanical, animal, or mineral ingredients like plant extracts, beeswax, and essential oils. They don't contain parabens, preservatives that potentially mimic estrogen, though "their estrogen activity is so weak," says Wilson (and the FDA has reported no cause for concern regarding parabens in cosmetics).

NATURALLY DERIVED

These products contain ingredients that were made from natural raw materials that were altered (at times chemically) to produce the new ingredient. The rest of the ingredients in the product are natural.

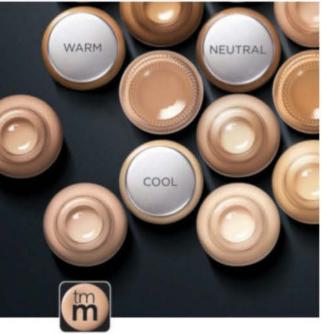

ORGANIC

If we say a product is organic, that means it's earned the USDA certification seal of approval. For details on just what that entails, check out usda.gov and click on the topic of Organic Agriculture.

SUSTAINABLE

We're pointing out items created in ways that shrink their negative impact on the environment, like being made with renewable resources or housed in biodegradable, recyclable packaging. They also don't contain petrochemicals. Why? "At some point, their starting material was either mineral oil or petrolatum, not renewable resources," says Wilson.

from your roots.

HOW GREEN IT IS Aside from the absorbent rice and corn starch and Georgia kaolin clay, this formula boasts strengthening bamboo extract and a light, floral fragrance derived from natural essential oils.

THE PRO SAYS Watch out, or this shaker will douse your head with enough powder to preserve a month's worth of blowouts. "This is not a package-to-scalp kind of application," says hairstylist Nathaniel Hawkins. However, if you pour some into your palm and work it in with fingers, "it will absorb beautifully and add some oomph to roots."

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS Meh. Our tester has medium-thick, wavy hair and is no stranger to dry shampoo. "Having to shake it into my hand then work it into my hair is a little tedious. I'd rather just spray and go, to be honest," she says. "It works, and the white residue disappears easily, but you need quite a bit to make the grease and shine go away."

organic BODY OIL HOW IT WORKS The blend of organic jojoba, tamanu, olive, avocado, and sunflower oils promises to nourish and moisturize adult and infant skin sans irritation.

HOW GREEN IT IS Co-founder Jessica Alba helped produce an honestly eco-friendly, USDA-certified organic product with sustainably grown ingredients—so we'll forgive her for Good Luck Chuck.

THE PRO SAYS This is a well-priced daily moisturizer for all skin types, says Dr. Fishman. "It's especially good for eczema-prone skin because of the sunflower oil, which studies have shown can help the condition." If you find it a tad greasy, she suggests mixing it with your moisturizer. This gives you deep hydration without sacrificing the cosmetic elegance of a lotion.

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS "I tend to get scaly legs, and I've noticed after using this that they look and feel really moisturized all day long." Our busy tester also loves how "fast and easily" the formula slips on and absorbs into the skin.

sustainable spa CANDLE

HOW IT WORKS Light the cotton wick, and enjoy a 40-hour,

HOW GREEN IT IS Paraffin, the main component in many candles at your local mall, is actually a petrochemical, explains Wilson. This vesselless pillar (read: less glass in the landfill) is 100-percent-natural veggie wax, with no animal by-products.

THE PRO SAYS Along with pluses on the sustainability side, the lack of synthetic fragrance also scores points for this candle. Man-made scents can have "50 or 100 ingredients," and some may release small amounts of risky formaldehyde into the air and possibly into your lungs, Wilson says.

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS "I get migraines quite often, so I love having lavender candles and oils around to soothe and calm my head." The scent isn't overpowering, "but at times I wish it were stronger," says our tester.

BEAUTY DO THEY REALLY WORK?

HOW IT WORKS You know the drill: Lather up to get clean, then slather on conditioner for more hydration and shine (from argan and pumpkinseed oil). The products are also stabilized at a more acidic pH to better match the pH of your scalp and promote stronger, healthier hair.

HOW GREEN IT IS The lack of parabens, phthalates, and silicone (a synthetic smoothing agent) puts these naturally derived formulations in decent standing.

THE PRO SAYS Hawkins scores the products high on both lather factor (for the shampoo) and rinsability (for both), areas in which he finds other "natural" cleansers fall short. "Everyone's hair I used it on was shiny, soft, and felt great," he says. Hawkins also likes the inclusion of argan oil: "It penetrates the cuticle, providing the lipids hair needs to stay supple and healthy."

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS

We've got a winning pair. "I used both of these together for a month, and I'm still using them," says our tester. "The shampoo has a good lather, but the conditioner was runnier than expected." Her curly hair is behaving as it usually does, "but it does look less greasy."

crows'-feet ERAS

HOW IT WORKS The cooling steel roller-ball applicator battles fine lines and discoloration with targeted doses of carrot-seed oil (containing vitamin C), black cumin-seed oil, camellia oil, rose-hip oil, and pomegranate-seed oil.

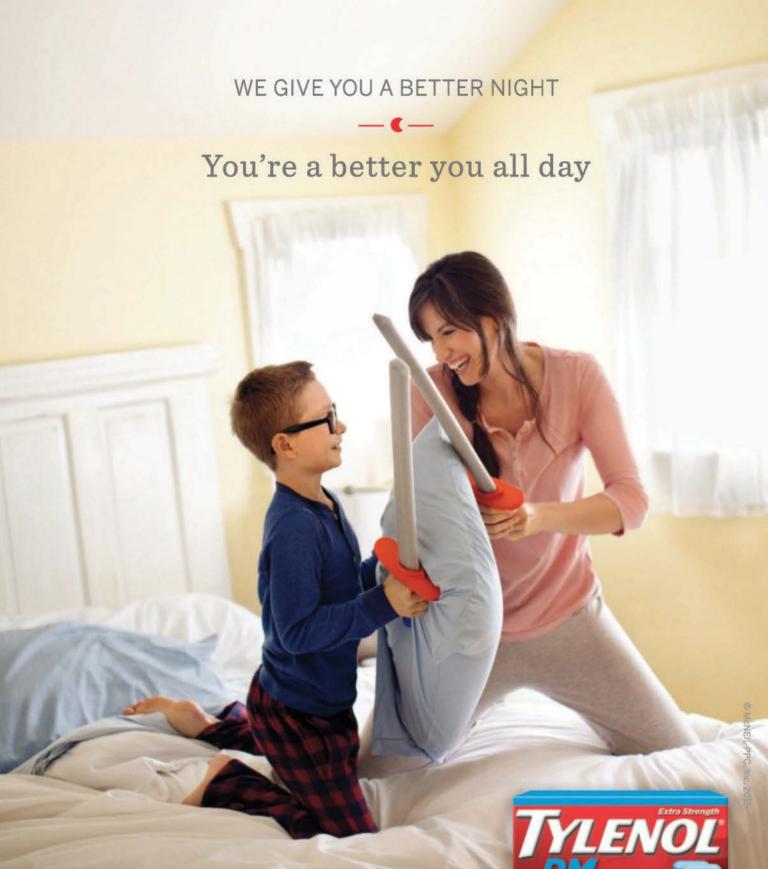

HOW GREEN IT IS Bravo for displaying the USDA Organic seal on the packaging. "I love that the product is just natural oils," says Dr. Fishman.

THE PRO SAYS Both Dr. Fishman and cosmetic chemist Ni'Kita Wilson feel that, while it's a lovely blend of hydrating oils, it's not especially eye-area-specific. "This could just as easily work as a face oil," says Dr. Fishman. "It's not offering much more than moisture," says Wilson.

THE INSTYLE GUINEA PIG SAYS "I love it. I use it every day, morning and night." Our tester's skin felt moisturized, "and I did look less puffy and a little fresher." Is it wishful thinking? "Well, it could have been this serum—or the extra sleep I logged. Either way, I like it!"

BOLD Pastels

It's surprisingly easy to master the look. Just follow this insider advice from Executive Editor

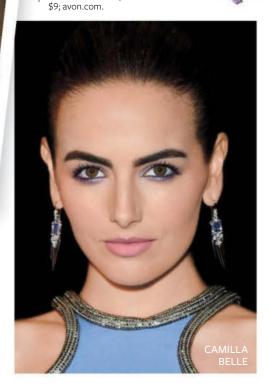

Amy Synnott

Revion Colorstay Shadow Links in Lilac, $3; revion.com. Avon Ultra Color Absolute Lipstick in Pink Revival, Why I Love Them...

- 1 They pack a pretty punch. Don't let the feminine connotations of "pastel" fool you. This spring's crop of light shades are as fierce as they are flattering thanks to their opaque finish. Unlike traditional pastels, they pop on all complexions.
- 2 They play nicely with every skin tone. The key is choosing the right color: Pinks and greens flatter cool skin types, while peachier hues brighten warmer ones. A universal safe bet? Lilac. With its mix of warm and cool tones, this color works on every mug.
- 3 They look fresh and springy. Nothing says "adieu, Polar Vortex" quite like a stroke of robin's-egg blue or shimmering peach.

CANDY GIRLS

Delicate pink lip gloss? So 2014. This season it looks as if the Easter Bunny got his paws into the makeup caddy. From powder blue liner at Fendi to apricot lips at Nanette Lepore, the newest pastels are addictively sweet.

PURPLE HAZE

Who doesn't want "eyes that look like hibiscus flowers"? Such was the description Benefit makeup artist Charlotte Tilbury gave for the look she created at Matthew Williamson's spring show. To build a dewy base, she prepped lids with a deep berry lip color, then added purple cream shadow all over them, starting at the inner corners and blending up and around under the lower lash line.

Benefit Creaseless Cream Shadow in Always a Bridesmaid, $20; benefitcosmetics.com.

CORAL FIXATION

Inspired by "the beauty of a walk along the beach," Maybelline makeup artist Grace Lee swiped the same milky coral hue on all the models at Nanette Lepore. A shade like this looks freshest on smooth lips, so before you apply color, exfoliate with a baby toothbrush. To make the lipstick last, put on two coats, blotting in between. Finish with a dusting of translucent powder.

Maybelline New York Color Sensational Rebel Bloom in Peach Poppy, $7; maybelline.com.

File this under makeup tricks you probably should not try at home: At Fendi, makeup artist Peter Phillips glued tiny strips of blue leather to models' lids using Duo eyelash adhesive. Fortunately for the delicate skin of your upper lids, the same look can be achieved with pale blue liquid liner. Steady your hand by resting your elbow on a table. Apply liner, then dry by fanning your lid with a playing card.

Stila Stay All Day Waterproof Liquid Eye Liner in Periwinkle, $20; stilacosmetics.com.

My Secret Trick

You can make any sheer lip color more opaque by first dabbing a tiny bit of foundation or concealer onto your lips. Like a solid camisole under a gauzy blouse, this reduces transparency, adding more punch to the original shade. And pop goes the pastel!

BEAUTY TALK

Gabrielle Union

The refreshingly candid actress and star of Being Mary Jane opens up about getting serious beauty rest, the upside of wearing a weave, and why eating a hot link isn't so bad

OK. That skin of yours. You're 42 and giving 22-year-olds a run for their money. Obviously, you've got great genes, but what can you teach us? The biggest thing is sleep. My goal is eight hours, but I'll take nine. Anything less than six is problematic. I've also learned how to say no. As women we're conditioned to overextend ourselves and always say yes to everyone. Saying no doesn't make you a bad person; it's called selfpreservation. It eliminates unwanted stress—and stress will age you. These are things that are free. What about products? I wash my face and remove my makeup every night with a gel cleanser. Sometimes I even break out a white cloth to make sure the filth is gone. I follow with toner and moisturizer, and in the morning I use SPF. Sunscreen is a must, no matter your skin tone. Let's talk about hair. You've been very open about the fact that you wear a weave. Listen, I wouldn't have any real hair if I didn't wear a weave! Or the little that I did have would be fried or broken off. When I'm filming, I have to get my hair done every day, and that means a lot of heat, color, and product buildup. So I let my hairstylists do all of that to a weave. Then when I'm not working, I wear my real hair, and it's long and healthy. It's actually much longer than the weave. So how do you keep your body so fit? Do you diet? In general, the things I tend to crave are pretty healthy. But I've been wanting a hot link lately, and I'm going to get that hot link today. If it comes with a biscuit, I'm going to eat that too. A few times a month, I eat whatever I want. Life is too short. If I die tomorrow nobody's going to say, "Oh, what a thin corpse! Look at her clavicle showing in the casket." —KAHLANA BARFIELD >

the MANE WOMAN

"I'm OK with going out in a hat—and not a cute one—unless I'm about to walk the red carpet," says Union. "And by red carpet I mean LAX airport, which is basically the runway." Here, the backstory behind some of her head-turning looks.

"I feel most snatched with straight hair. A fresh weave with straight hair? Forget about it! It's a clean, classic look that you can rock any time of the year."

"Larry Sims [the hairstylist] gave me this fishtail braid. Back then it wasn't being done as much. He didn't want it to look perfect, so he pulled some pieces out."

"This is my real hair, and this is how I normally wear it when my weave is out. I live in both L.A. and Miami. Trying to keep a curl in extreme heat? Good luck!"

"Hairstylist Kiyah Wright invented this style of curl—where an inch and a half of the ends is left straight. I remember doing press in Miami that day."

Got Dark Circles? Time to Get Out from Under

Whether you've had a string of restless nights or are now convinced that raccoon eyes are your new normal, we've got the scoop on brightening up (proper sleep habits not included)

If rings stay long past a late night, you're likely genetically predisposed to them. Other culprits can be histaminereleasing allergies. (They increase vascular "congestion" and excess pigmentation.) For allergies, ask your doctor about taking an antihistamine to improve symptoms. To stop circles from worsening, don't neglect SPF, says N.Y.C. dermatologist Elizabeth Hale. It prevents UV-induced melanin spikes and preserves skin-firming collagen (a good thing, as thicker skin better masks darkness). And use daily moisturizer: You're more likely to rub dry, itchy skin, which exacerbates circles.

Coppertone ClearlySheer for Sunny Days Faces SPF 30, $10; at drugstores. Neutrogena Hydro Boost Water Gel, $19; at drugstores.

Circles continue to come and go as blood pools and drains under eyes. But now the issue can appear worse thanks to years of UV exposure and the natural thinning of skin. To keep skin thick so less of this activity shows through, use an evening O.T.C. retinol cream to boost firming collagen. "Dot it under the lower eyelids every other night at first to avoid irritation," says Dr. Hale. For day, under SPF, add a serum with antioxidant vitamin C, which helps "preserve collagen and offers long-term brightening so skin looks more radiant.

ROC Retinol Correxion Deep Wrinkle Night Cream, $23; at Target. Meaningful Beauty Antioxidant Day Crème SPF 20,

In this decade, your basic eye-illuminating plan stays the same: daily SPF with an antioxidant boost, plus pre-bedtime retinol. For those days when you look particularly spooky, add in a temporary trick or two: A cream with caffeine or the herb arnica can temporarily restrict blood vessels to decrease the purplish effect, says N.Y.C. dermatologist Michele Green. Upgrading your SPF to one with a color-correcting tint and a vessel-constricting cool metal tip will also help banish dark shadows.

NeoCutis Lumière Bio-Restorative Eye Cream (with caffeine), $90; lovelyskin.com. It Cosmetics CC+ Eye SPF 50+ in Tan, $29;

Houston, we have a contour problem. Age-related loss of volume under the eyes creates concavity (or a "hollow") that only makes rings look darker, says N.Y.C. dermatologic surgeon Anne Chapas. To temporarily reduce the shadows, try a serum with the plumping action of hyaluronic acid, says Dr. Hale. (Check out this Revlon product, which contains the ingredient.) At night, add a new layer: a serum with moisturizers, antioxidants, and peptides worn over your retinol to offer more collagenbuilding help.

UNTIL YOU CAN FIND TIME FOR DAILY SIESTAS, TUCK THESE GENIUS MOVES FROM MAKEUP ARTIST PATI DUBROFF INTO YOUR BACK POCKET

- 1 SKIP CONCEALER Wait, hear us out: Dubroff likes avoiding heavy, "potentially cakey" concealers and instead builds up layers of lightweight foundation to camouflage. Gently tap on a few even coats with your finger until you're in the clear.
- 2 PICK THE PERFECT SHADE To cover dark purple or reddish circles, use a base that's just a touch lighter than your skin tone. Got brown circles? Reverse this advice: "Go about a shade darker; otherwise, you could end up highlighting the problem."
- 3 LINE STRATEGICALLY Just like a pearly eye shadow on the inner corners can make you look more awake, tracing a flesh-toned pencil along your inner lash lines (or water lines) can produce a brightening effect that counteracts dark circles.

PRO SECRETS

REINVENT YOUR REGIMEN

Speak to skin-care guru Mila Moursi and she'll lay some harsh truth on you: "Just slapping products on your face—that won't make a difference." What will? Her glow-boosting game plan of deep-cleaning pores at night and applying youth-preserving ingredients in the morning

YOUR P.M. PREP

1 Cleanse

"Everyone rushes this step," Moursi says. Instead, massage cleanser into your face using a warm, wet washcloth and slow, circular motions. (She recommends this hydrating soap, which "cleanses and purifies yet doesn't dry out the skin like traditional bars.") Finish with a cool rinse. Clé de Peau Beauté Synactif Soap, $100; cledepeaubeaute.com.

2 Tone

To Moursi, skipping toner would be like missing an episode of Scandal: unthinkable. An alcohol-free version like this "balances surface pH levels and removes any cleanser residue without drying skin," she says. Carita Paris Ideal Hydration Lagoon Water, $52: caritadirect.com.

3 Exfoliate

A leave-on glycolic-acid formulation exfoliates, getting rid of dead cells on the surface and cleaning pores while you snooze. This technique preps skin to soak up A.M. treatments.

Mila Moursi Refining Lotion, $160; barneys.com.

YOUR A.M. PLAN

1 De-Puff

If you ended last night with a serving of salty fries, you may want to start the day with one of these serumsicles. Each little packet of liquid, which is loaded with amino acids and minerals, is meant to be frozen. So after a fresh application of toner, you can run the cubes over your face until they melt into skin; the cold will constrict blood vessels to temporarily de-puff and fight dehydration.

Mila Moursi Paris Cyro Serum Ice Cube Infusion, $155/8; barneys.com.

2 Treat

All the deep-cleaning you did before bed means your skin is "thirsty" and ready for active ingredients, says Moursi.
Apply a serum or cream with hyaluronic acid (to hold water) and peptides (to stimulate production of firming collagen). Add a layer of lightweight sunscreen to protect cells from UV damage.

La Roche-Posay Anthelios 30 Cooling Water-Lotion Sunscreen, $36; at drugstores.

DRY-BRUSHING-FOR YOUR FACE

At her bicoastal spas, Moursi enhances treatments with dry-brushing. Massaging limbs with gentle, dry bristles can increase lymphatic drainage to flush out toxins and prevent fatty tissue from settling. It's "just as important to do on your face as it is to do on your body to improve blood circulation and skin tone," she says. Comb through the basics of this weekly routine.

1 Begin at the bottom middle of your neck and brush gently in a clockwise circular motion up toward one ear. Repeat, starting from the neck and working up toward the other ear.

2 Place the tool next to one ear, and with the same circular motion, brush inward toward the middle of your face.
Repeat, starting at the other ear.

3 Start at one side of your forehead; brushing in circular motions, work your way across. Is your face a little pink? Good. "You want to see blood come to the surface," she says. Finish with a moisturizing face oil.

I'm a woman in my 60s looking for some real-life makeup tips. Please help!

"At this age you want to keep the brighter colors focused on lips and cheeks," says pro Elaine Offers, who created this look for Helen Mirren. But first, smooth skin with a hydrating oil so the makeup you apply glides on and glows. Spot-treat discoloration with a lightweight concealer. Then, work on those brows; the fuller they are, the more youthful they'll look. Hit arches and sparse spots with feathery pencil strokes, says Offers. When in doubt about the color, try a shade darker than your hair, she says. "If brows are silver or gray, use a taupe or blond pencil with a cool cast to it." Curl lashes (instant eye lift!) and keep dark liners and shadows concentrated around upper lashes. For cheeks, "I apply blush slightly higher than the apples and go up with it," says Offers. And never let the word "nude" escape your mouth. "As you age, you need bright lips to add pop and warmth," she says.

MIX CHECKS WITH STRIPES

This is easier than it looks: The graphic nature of these motifs makes them a cinch to pair like a pro. When in doubt, add in some white—its soothing properties prevent sensory overload.

Dermatologist Recommended for Scars and Stretch Marks*

"I had a bad fall and ended up with a large cut along my shin bone. I like to wear skirts and dresses so I was worried about having a scar in such a noticeable place. Just as the wound was healing, I read an article in a magazine in which a celebrity swore by Bio-Oil. I was skeptical, but I thought it was worth a try. I faithfully followed the directions for using Bio-Oil, and my scar is now less noticeable. I feel confident wearing skirts and dresses again, and I have Bio-Oil to thank!" Gwen Streeter

Intense. Homey. Sophisticated. Cheeky. Confident. Nervous. Daring. The many sides of KATE WINSLET provide a fascinating study in contradictions. And now, with a new baby, a new husband, and a slew of new roles, life is getting more interesting every day

It's just before lunch, and KATE WINSLET is feeling peckish. "Might be time for a lollipop," she says, craning toward the candy bowl in a form-fitting Calvin Klein Collection gown. "Oh, damn," she says, snapping a long creamy arm back from the sweets with a bored roll of her eyes. "I can't, can I? My tongue will go pink."

We are in a beautiful barn conversion in the heart of the English countryside, and Winslet is about to get photographed for our cover. In every beamed room, a fireplace flickers with muchneeded warmth; outside, a freezing wind whips the leafless trees of the West Sussex coastline that the Oscar-winning 39-year-old now calls home.

She has driven herself to the shoot in her large black Land Rover Discovery, arriving bare-faced and unstarlike in black Rag & Bone jeans, a black Alexander Wang long-sleeve T-shirt, and Isabel Marant boots. As she sits for hair and makeup, she is polite, friendly, and absolutely in control. After more than 20 years of being photographed, the actress and Lancôme spokeswoman doesn't pussyfoot around when it comes to her image. "I've been at this a bloody long time," she says, speaking to my reflection in a handheld mirror as she takes over from the makeup artist and puts finishing touches on her look. "I know what works and what doesn't." A few moments later, she proves her point on set. "You see, guys?" she says in a flawless American accent, laughing tolerantly as a wind machine starts whirring, at her suggestion. "Trust the f-ing pro!"

Winslet is an old-fashioned star in every sense. First, there's the velvety beauty; she's curvaceous, with that trademark mole above her lip. Then there's her much-scrutinized private life. She's had three marriages (at age 23 to director Jim Threapleton, at age 27 to director Sam Mendes, and at age 37 to Richard Branson's nephew Ned Rocknroll-he changed his name legally from Ned Abel Smith) and three children, one from each union (Mia, 14; Joe, 11; and 1-year-old Bear). Add to that one Oscar, three Golden Globes, an Emmy, and two BAFTA awards, and you get Hollywood gold dust. Not bad for the daughter of struggling actors from the unremarkable English suburb of Reading.

And yet for all the lives she's lived, Winslet is shockingly down-to-earth—and fairly open about how she juggles the "insanity" of her hard-charging life as a mom, an actor, and a new wife. "I had a tricky day today," she confides, the day before we meet again at the shoot. "It was one of those days when I didn't achieve anything. I just spent a lot of time thinking and panicking." Sitting cross-legged in a white dressing gown, hair in a loose ponytail, she admits she often still feels "true, true panic" before filming a new role. "I have moments when I'll stare at a script and say, 'I don't know what I'm doing!' But then I push myself into that feeling because I think panic is important."

Speaking of risk taking, you have two strikingly different films coming up next—A Little Chaos and Insurgent. Can you tell us a bit about them? Sabine [A Little Chaos] is a corseted 17th-century landscape gardener with a sadness in her past, and Jeanine Matthews [Insurgent] is a pencil-skirt-wearing, futuristic baddie! It's funny, because to me, they represent the pre-baby and post-baby me. I filmed A Little Chaos during my first trimester. I literally had sick bags hidden under my skirts. We had to keep letting out the clothes. I had boobs like a shelf—it was bonkers. I go soft and doughy quite quickly when I'm pregnant.

And then Insurgent was one of your first jobs after giving birth to your son Bear [with husband Ned Rocknroll]? Bear was still a baby. I loved getting back to work and squeezing myself into some slick, sexy clothes.

Were you back to your pre-baby weight by then? God, no! Nor would I have wanted to be. I am genuinely baffled by those women who have babies and then want to look like they haven't had them. I've definitely got myself back into shape now, but my days of nude scenes are well and truly over, thank God!

With your third child, did you find the transition getting back to work any easier? Well [laughing], it's been 10 years since I had my second baby, so I can barely remember the last time. But, I must say, I'm loving it. And I've been offered such great roles too—I'm about to play opposite Michael Fassbender in the Steve Jobs movie [directed by Danny Boyle]. I'm really excited. Aaron Sorkin's script is honestly one of the best I've ever read in my life. So you're keeping yourself on your toes, then? Yeah. Big time. One of the things I'm most enjoying about my work at the moment is the diversity. Looking back, I think I > went through a phase of playing the same types of women: women who were trapped, women who were frustrated. Since getting together with Ned, and since having Bear, I feel like I've been creatively reenergized. Not only do I have an incredible husband, who has a great sense of adventure and is up for going wherever my

KATE WINSLET What I've Learned About...

A working actress since the age of 15, Winslet has earned more accolades in her 39 years than most people do in a lifetime. Might want to take her advice.

SUCCESSA

Never, ever take it for granted. You can never stop learning. You need to keep pushing yourself, keep trying to get better at what you do, even if it scares you. When I was prepping for Revolutionary Road, the nerves actually made me physically sick. I couldn't eat, or sleep, or anything. Thank goodness I had Leo [DiCaprio] to go through it with. He's my greatest friend and has been since we made Titanic; we look out for each other, he and I. One more thing: Always—always—behave well. Bad behavior is totally unacceptable on every level. I learned that from more experienced actors when I was starting out, and I try and pass it on to young actors I work with. If I see someone [being difficult], I make a quiet mental note to show them how they should behave. You have to work hard not to be altered by [success].

It's even more fun with age and wisdom. Plus, you cherish the little moments because you know how quickly they go. I'm a mother to a baby and a teenager, so I need to have a wide range of mothering skills. In a funny way, your children almost need you more the older they get; it's your job to help them navigate their way through life.

FRIENDSHIP

Most of my friends aren't in the same business as me. I don't tend to hang out with actors. Having said that, one of my greatest friends is Emma Thompson. When I worked with her on Sense and Sensibility, I was very young and very jangled by what was happening to my life. She made me eat proper amounts of food; she made me celebrate who I was; and she had my back. Plus, she was, and still is, a woman who is incredibly comfortable in her own skin. And that, to me, is the greatest success of all.

WORK-LIFE BALANCE

What? Is there one?

work might take us, but I also have this gorgeous little boy who makes me feel fulfilled every single day. I honestly feel like I'm quietly making my own personal comeback—not that I want to make any big statements to the world or anything!

And how are you adjusting to having three children?

I'm 10 years older, so I'm definitely much calmer and more chilled out than I was. There's none of that "Don't put the baby on the muddy floor" kind of neurosis. And Mia and Joe are a huge help. If I want to have a shower or cook supper, they can absolutely watch him for me.

So how do the logistics of your life work now? When you go off to make a movie, does everyone join you? Bear and Ned are always with me, and as far as possible I try to schedule my work around school holidays so the big two can come too. Fortunately, obsessive planning is my forte. I mean, I could honestly tell you, without looking in a diary, everything that's happening to all of us in the next four months, down to how many boxes of fish fingers we'll need in the fridge in case of emergency.

I hear you're a great cook. I really love cooking. It relaxes me. I would happily spend an entire day in my kitchen. That's one of the things I do find impossible to delegate, actually; there were times when I was filming The Dressmaker in Australia when I'd get home from filming at 11 o'clock at night and start making a turkey Bolognese for Bear to eat the next day.

Presumably you have plenty of help? Honestly, no. We don't have a staffed-up life with lots of people running around. We do have a nanny, but a lot of the time it's just the two of us. And sometimes we do realize, OK, we're juggling too much. But Ned really is the most fantastic, hands-on daddy. He's like a superman. And that makes such a difference. I think it's why I've been able to indulge in the creative side of my life a bit more. I have incredible peace of mind walking out the door at six in the morning, knowing I might not be back until 12, 13, 14 hours later but not worrying at all about my baby—quite the opposite, in fact. I'm so lucky [smiles]. I sort of can't believe how lucky I am, actually.

You have been famous for almost 20 years, since you made Titanic. How do you navigate the pitfalls of a life in the public eye? That's basically half my life, isn't it? Well, it's very simple, really. I protect myself against all the evil things out there by completely cutting myself off from them. I don't read gossip magazines—won't have them in the house—I don't even read my reviews. I don't do Facebook or Instagram. I have an iPhone for phone calls and an iPad for reading scripts, but I don't have a computer and am genuinely thinking of giving up email in the next few months. I mean, it's great for staying in touch with friends, but apart from that, it's just so much noise, you know? Someone always wants an answer from me about something. I want to live my life, and see it clearly, and not be constantly distracted by some device or other.

You've obviously worked very hard to get to this place in your life. Where do you think your drive comes from?

I got my first big film role, in Heavenly Creatures, when I was just 17 years old. I wouldn't use the word "ambitious" to describe myself. Mine was more a quiet, steady determination. I had to work—and I had to leave school at 16—because my family didn't have money. We were the kids with the free school meals. I needed to work to survive. I also think I was spurred on by people around me who didn't believe I would succeed. One teacher, when I told her I was going to be an actress, said that I would only ever get the best friend or the fat-sister roles. I remember thinking, No [wags her finger and shakes her head]. No way. I might just have to prove you wrong there.

That teacher must feel pretty silly now. You'll be 40 this year, and you've achieved so much. Is there anything left on your bucket list? Oh my god, yes! Are you joking? I don't know why, but I can never get beyond that feeling that I have something to prove. I want to act in lots of different places, playing lots of different parts. Right now I feel like I'm just getting going. I want to go rocketing toward 40, I really do. I want to get there and say, "Wow, I've really earned these celebrations."

Physically speaking, how do you feel about aging? Well, it's definitely happening on the old face, that's for sure. Those wrinkles are here, and they're here to stay.

Do you ever have Botox? [She leans in very close to me and wrinkles her forehead with intention.]

That'll be a "no" then? Look. I take care of my skin. I have regular facials. But, let's face it, there are only so many facials one can have.

Do you have an exercise regimen? Nothing as structured as that. I do vinyasa yoga whenever I can. It makes me feel good, and I like the workout. And I love a good, strenuous hike with the baby in the backpack.

And what about fun? When do you find time for that? Fun for me is being with my family and friends, having a big walk and a picnic on the beach. I don't party much. Never have. I guess that's because I had to be resourceful from a really young age. When you're working as hard as I was at 16 and 17, you can't go out and get pissed, because you've only got yourself to fall back on.

Over the years, you've had to put up with your body shape being scrutinized more than most. How have you maintained a healthy body image? Oh, god. My boring curves. I still dip in and out of feeling confident as much as the next person, but I can genuinely say, now more than ever, that I really do love the fact that I'm curvy. I've got boobs and a bum and a man who loves me. When you go through the sort of scrutiny that I have, you have to choose a means of dealing with that level of judgment. My way has always been to take a good look at how my career is going. The way I see it, I have an incredibly fulfilling, rewarding career that has nothing to do with the size of my arse.

DESERT BLOM

Fresh-faced and free-spirited, Britt Robertson stuns opposite George Clooney in Tomorrowland, swoons with Scott Eastwood in The Longest Ride, and seduces in the breeziest of this season's bohemian maxis

photographed by ERIK MADIGAN HECK styled by MELISSA RUBINI

PLAY CRAFT

"Oh, shoot," says Britt Robertson, her blond hair loosely ponytailed, making her look much younger than her 24 years. It's a Monday afternoon at Color Me Mine, a pottery studio in L.A., and the actress's mug isn't turning out how she had hoped. It was meant to be a Valentine's Day present for someone special (perhaps her boyfriend, actor Dylan O'Brien). "But," she says with a sigh, "every gift I give always ends up being disastrous."

Not that she hasn't tried. When she's not working on projects like Stephen King's CBS series Under the Dome, last year's lauded Cake, the epic Tomorrowland (out in May), and this month's Nicholas Sparks weepie The Longest Ride, Robertson can often be found making crafts for her large family back in South Carolina. "I have six younger brothers and sisters," she says. "So making something is easier than shopping for them."

As for shopping for herself, Robertson, in an oversize Vince sweater and BCBG leggings, confesses to being a fashion tyro. She just hired a stylist, at her agent's suggestion. "They want me to look more," she pauses, "professional." Fashion aside, she is that, consummately.

Robertson entered the Hollywood crucible at age 14, after her grandmother moved with her from the South. "She was terrified I'd get kidnapped," Robertson recalls. Instead, she landed a role opposite Steve Carell in 2007's Dan in Real Life. "I couldn't handle it," she says. "All of a sudden, I didn't know my lines." No longer starstruck, she recently stayed up all night eating sushi and discussing her career with her Tomorrowland co-star George Clooney. "He said, 'If you can do this, you can do anything." If only that were true for her mug. It has turned a slightly menacing purple hue. "Oh, well," Robertson says with a laugh. "It's the thought that counts.'

TEA TIME

Things move fast around Nathalie Emmanuel these days, which explains the borrowed clothes. A few flights back, somewhere between a New Mexico movie set and an L.A. dubbing studio, her suitcase split and was abandoned.

Some hours later, the Englishborn actress is sitting in her sister's "very comfy" gray sweater and ieans at a café on North London's Camden High Street. Only the wide-frame Chanel glasses are Emmanuel's own, along with a necklace bearing a moonstone amulet for "safe travel by land and sea." Apparently, it didn't cover bags.

Emmanuel seems giddy with excitement at being back home. "I literally walked into my house and was like—yes!" she says, her Essex accent firmly in place. London means a return to fundamental principles: garage music, yoga, and tea. Lots of tea. "So important. Love my tea."

This year, the 26-year-old will help carry three global franchises: Furious 7, out this month, The Maze Runner: The Scorch Trials (which she has just wrapped filming), and her third season of Game of Thrones.

It's been only a few years since Emmanuel left Hollyoaks, the U.K. soap where she got her start, and in her dizzying new orbit, she insists on certain conventions, such as riding public transport to auditions and maintaining a tight circle of friends, to keep her steady. Her acting ambitions mean that for now, relationships, vacation, and much else are edged out of her schedule. Anyway, says Emmanuel, she's just a "home girl" with a dream to teach yoga and open a café. "An English teahouse, because I am a 90-yearold woman in the body of a 26-year-old," she says, laughing.

Inspired by world cultures and devoted to global citizenship, OLIVIA WILDE makes a strong statement in H&M's new sustainable—and stylish—collection

H&M Conscious Exclusive Collection organic cotton top, organic linen T-shirt, and organic mulberry silk trousers.

NATURE TAMED

Olivia Wilde takes recycling seriously. Not only does she run an ethically focused online marketplace called Conscious Commerce in her spare time, but she has also been known to recycle a dress or two for the red carpet. "If you keep something long enough," Wilde explains, "eventually it will come back into fashion." At the CFDA Fashion Awards last June, for example, she wore a fringed Mollie Parnis dress that had belonged to Anjelica Huston, who was last seen wearing it on the arm of Jack Nicholson in Cannes in 1974.

"I like to think of the night that dress had," Wilde says. "Now someone else needs to wear it. It needs to keep living, and then it needs to write a book."

Wilde believes the fashion industry can make a difference in the world, especially when consumers begin to change their standards. That's why, in 2013, she founded her company with her friend Barbara Burchfield to connect like-minded corporations with nonprofits in creative ways, and it's also why she's the face of H&M's latest Conscious Exclusive Collection. These effortlessly elegant clothes, which hit stores April 16, are the retailer's most earth-friendly yet. Besides using organic textiles, every detail is designed to promote better practices in the way clothes are made. Polyester, for instance, is recycled not only in the sequins that adorn a flapper dress but in the material of the dress itself.

What's more, Wilde says, the designs fit well into her easygoing red-carpet style. Along with everything else, that sensibility has become more confident since she welcomed her son, Otis, a year ago, with her fiancé, Jason Sudeikis. Besides starring in the horror movie The Lazarus Effect (as a re-animated, rather than recycled, medical researcher), she stepped into the new role of feature producer for the upcoming drama Meadowland.

"Motherhood has made me a little kinder to myself in terms of my flaws," Wilde says. "It has made me evolve too. I'm at a different stage in my life in terms of what I find sexy and what I find chic."

STRAWBERRY ICE

You can almost taste this hue:
"It has that fun Popsicle quality that we crave when the weather starts to warm up," says Pantone's executive director Leatrice Eiseman. It connotes a freshness "like the juicy fruit that it's named for."

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

Just like salmon, Strawberry Ice can feel a little mid-century (and not in a cool vintage way) if paired with minty green or white. The trick, says Eiseman, is to reinvent it in your décor or closet with muted neutrals or zesty brights.

NOW FACTOR

Bolder than blush and more subtle than bubble gum, this yummy shade, which appeared in 10 percent of spring runway shows, may just be

If strawberry ice—plus fizz—makes your mouth water, try this easy take on the classic brunch staple from chef Curtis Stone. To make a batch, get those flutes chilling. Then purée one pound of ripe, halved berries in a blender. Using a sieve, strain the purée into a bowl that you'll put in the freezer for about five minutes. Stir occasionally, then transfer the cold but not frozen purée into a pitcher and slowly add one bottle of chilled prosecco, whisking gently to blend. Serve, and enjoy (brunch date not included).

CLASSIC BLUE

Like navy, another shade you'll be hearing plenty about for spring, Classic Blue is a reliable standby that won't take you too far out of your comfort zone. "I call this blue an anchor because it's one of those go-to colors you can always depend on," says Eiseman.

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

The trusty shade met up with lots of black on the spring runways, but when it comes to patching these two heavy hitters together in your living room, "leave it to the professionals," says designer Jonathan Adler. Combining the two shades in a room can look a little too normcore if they're not handled just right or if not broken up with soft neutrals.

NOW FACTOR

This exact shade appeared in 12 percent of spring shows. Our home design pros cop to recent crushes on lacquered end tables and living room walls in this close cousin to cobalt.

EMBRACE INDIGO SHIBORI

This Japanese tie-dye technique adds interest to your décor without overwhelming any existing color scheme. "It works almost as a neutral especially since the blue is so deep," says interior designer Miles Redd. But should you want to use it to inspire an entire room's palette, try pairing indigo and white with a "shade of similar strength," like red, yellow, or emerald, he suggests.

AOUAMARINE

The oceanic reference speaks to the tranquil waters you'd have to jet off to a faraway island to find. The color, says Eiseman, has the same "soothing, dreamy quality as the Caribbean sea."

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

Its pitfalls are shared by a number of pastels: too light and too close to a certain satiny bridesmaid dress you might still be paying off. If you need a reason to love the shade again, envision it against crisp white in your bedroom, or turn it more luxe than girlie by wearing a gauzy Aquamarine shift with metallic accessories.

#INSTYLECOLOR

From the precise winged liners at Fendi to the bold space-age shadows at Honor to a two-toned lid at Elie Saab, this hue helped define a major spring makeup moment. But if your weekend plans don't include strutting down a catwalk, makeup artist Pat McGrath recommends blending the icy tone with another cool shade to add depth and make it more wearable. "If you're fair, try a lighter aquamarine liner with a more violet-based blue shadow," says McGrath. For darker skin tones, she suggests aquamarine mixed with teal and green. TOASTED ALMOND

This all-natural tone is light, like the shell of the nut, but warmer than off-white or even linen. "We call it a suntanned neutral," says Eiseman. "It's a classic color that always comes back because it's timeless."

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

When lighter shades feel a little precious for your urban uniform, look for structured pieces in heavier fabrics to pair with your black slouchy trousers or leather skirt. Try a boxy leather T or a crisp cargo jacket in almond.

NOW FACTOR

If spring color trends are defined by a raft of cool ocean tones on one side and warmer pinks and oranges on the other, this neutral, which appeared in 12 percent of runway shows, stands in the middle, a perfect foil for everything from Aquamarine to Strawberry Ice.

MAKE EVERY DAY A SUNDAE

If your idea of an ice-cream topper involves a vat of hot fudge and a gooey brownie, who are we to judge? But to play up the simple elegance of Häagen-Dazs's brand-new Applewood Smoked Caramel Almond flavor ($5/14 oz.; available in April at major retailers), Stone recommends more subtle pairings. His fave mix-ins? Sesame seeds, a drizzle of honey, or a combo of ground cinnamon and nutmeg. Go ahead, treat yourself.

RETHINK NUDE LINGERIE

What do you get when you mix sheer paneling and a touch of lace? One of spring's most alluring underpinnings. To choose the right shade to flatter your skin tone. Perez recommends erring on the side of something pinkish over anything yellow so you look more glowing than sallow. And don't be afraid of a little peekaboo action under a blazer or a crisp white shirt. Unlike a red or black bra strap, "seeing some lace against your natural coloring can be more elegant than trashy," says Perez.

LUCITE GREEN

Just like the 1950s acrylic for which it's named, this soft and serene shade offers a clarity that makes it ideal for the warmer months.

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

Since it lives in between green and blue, Lucite can skew either earthy or elegant. Treat it with kid gloves when it comes to color pairings. You can't go wrong with neutrals like navy and tan.

NOW FACTOR

Glimmering green is making its retro charms known for spring—even on your social networks. It's one of the most pinned hues, particularly for travel inspiration.

MASTER A WATERCOLOR MANI

For an impressionistic masterpiece that looks adorable with head-to-toe denim, try this Lucite, white, and dove gray swirl from Opening Ceremony's spring runway. Simply take the three shades and brush them on as free-form blobs over your nail. While they're still wet, dip a piece of a makeup sponge (or a small eyeshadow brush) into acetone and then dab over the colors so they bleed together. "Keep dabbing until you see the pattern you love, then let them dry and seal with a topcoat," says CND co-founder and style director Jan Arnold, who developed the runway look.

Create a Fresh Tablescape

Going tonal with this airy hue puts your table on trend with zero fussiness. Adding touches of gold and white helps dress things up, while a solid indigo tablecloth ensures the refined mix doesn't get lost in the wood grain of your table. For a centerpiece, Redd suggests "delicate and lacy maidenhair ferns" in keeping with the natural mix.

SCUBA BLUE

Aloha! Inspired by the beach vacations that it calls to mind, this lively tone, much like Aquamarine, just might give you the urge to book a flight to paradise.

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

Afraid to dive into a bright? Let the peacock be your guide, and wade in slowly by mixing this punchy blue with navy and a darker teal for a cohesive look.

NOW FACTOR

Within spring's major blue period, this vibrant shade wins both most playful and most invigorating, says Pantone's Eiseman, noting its presence in

TAKE IT FOR A SWIM

We're loving spring's Scuba-hued suits—and our color pros say the shade can bring more pep to your skin tone than basic black or navy. Says Jaffe: "It falls in the middle ground on the color wheel, which means it's universally flattering." The cheerful hue works in sexy shapes—say, a cutout one-shoulder style—and really stands out with sporty details like zippers and side panels.

GET AWAY FROM IT ALL

Our obsession with Uruguay's new Bahia Vik Jose Ignacio hotel goes way beyond its hip interiors, which are awash in shades of blue and filled with canvases and sculptures by local artists. Situated near Punta del Este, an area that's long been the stomping ground of the international jet set, the boho-chic beach hotel offers individual bungalows tucked into sandy dunes with sweeping views of the sparkling South Atlantic. While you're there, try your hand at kite surfing in the beginner-friendly shallow waters of Laguna Garzón, go for a horseback ride at the Estancia Vik stables, and indulge in an authentic Uruguayan asado. #NoFilter required here (bahiavik.com for rates).

CUSTARD

Creamy, with a hint of nutmeg mixed in, this most mellow yellow, like a tasty dessert, is one that people are drawn to. Pantone's studies show a preference for this over, say, dandelion. "If you're just dipping your toe into yellow, this is a good starting point," says Eiseman.

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

Think you can't wear yellow? Know that this supersoft shade can warm up cooler skin tones better than starker, brighter ones do. That said, it looks positively gorgeous on bronzed or darker skin too.

NOW FACTOR

Jaffe calls it her favorite runway color of spring 2015. "At the New York shows, there were so many fun yellow looks that when I didn't see one, I kept expecting it," she says.

MARSALA

The robust shade, which gets its name from an Italian cooking wine, evokes the warm feeling you get while enjoying a rich meal.

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

Can a closet full of black really make room for this warm reddish brown? SI, signora. The deep red tones in this hybrid give it just enough contrast to work safely with black.

NOW FACTOR

Pantone's color of the year, Marsala has seeped its way into everything from fashion to animated films in the U.S. and abroad, says Eiseman.

Our bet? You'll be taking wine with...everything.

TAKE IT HEAD TO TOE

A Marsala clutch can be a great little update, but you'll get the most impact with a generous pour. This wine's deep, saturated color makes it work almost like a neutral navy or black. To try a monochrome approach, Perez recommends varying the textures within your look. "A bag with a matte finish and patent shoes can give the whole outfit more dimension," he explains.

CHOOSE THE RIGHT WINE

As much as you might want to, you shouldn't sip marsala straight up. But the fortified wine will elevate your cuisine, especially if you choose a bottle from good Italian vintners like Marco De Bartoli, Florio, or Carlo Pellegrino, says chef Stone. In general, he says, choose dry versions to add a nutty flavor to savory dishes with mushrooms or beef, whereas sweet marsala works with chicken and poultry as well as desserts.

TANGERINE

Here's your official spring accent color, say our pros, who were inspired by the shade's energy—and impressed with its surprising versatility. In interiors, "it works with '60s mod and more glam styles too," says designer Jonathan Adler.

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

Love the zip of a citrus clutch or pair of strappy heels but wonder how long you'll be able to keep it in rotation? You'll be happy to hear that the shade is sticking around, according to Eiseman.

NOW FACTOR

Call it a red-carpet takeover. Everyone from Beyoncé to Reese Witherspoon has sported the shade recently. "It can be beautiful on blondes or lend major glow to olive

LET YOUR ACCESSORIES STAND OUT

Add some zest to your finishing touches: Jaffe recommends choosing a striking "architectural" bag—like a structured two-tone tote—and pairing it with white. When it comes to shoes and jewelry, mixing Tangerine with metals, particularly gold, looks unexpected in all the right ways, she adds. Perez likes deep orange extras with complementary shades such as aqua and navy for perfectly balanced contrast.

How Wendy's® preps Romaine.

How other "salad places" prep Romaine.

You'd be surprised who's cutting corners on salads. Not Wendy's. We make our salads fresh every day, starting by hand-washing and hand-prepping whole heads of Romaine in our restaurants. Some other salad places often use Romaine that's processed in a factory and shipped pre-bagged, then served in a fancy bowl with a fancy price tag. At Wendy's, we believe it's not what your salad goes into, it's what goes into your salad.

It's time to look beyond the bowl at YouTube.com/Wendys.

GLACIER GREY

Just like its moniker implies, Glacier Grey has a "wonderful cooling quality" that tones down more pigmented shades, such as warm pinks and saturated blues.

PERFECT PAIRINGS

COMMON CONUNDRUM

If this gray's quirkier pairings don't come naturally to you, seek out pieces that do the work for you—from colorblocked full skirts to sportif striped Ts. Err toward crisp modern silhouettes that emphasize the color contrast.

NOW FACTOR

This icy upstart, which appeared in 6 percent of the collections, is the latest gray to earn a prominent spot on the catwalk—even though its M.O. is to slip quietly into the background.

ADAM LIPPES

Two irresistible flavors

Gray

Step aside, Nana. The younger set is reinventing the whole silver-fox thing, says colorist Cynthia Alvarez, who works with Dascha Polanco. But keep in mind that these gray manes aren't reminiscent of the shade you may (or may not) have peeking out at your roots. "You want a hue with blue or purple undertones, which keeps the look youthful and fun," Alvarez explains. Be sure to moisturize daily with argan oil, and use a purple-tinged shampoo, like Pravana (pravana.com for info), to preserve your silver.

DETOX WITH CHARCOAL

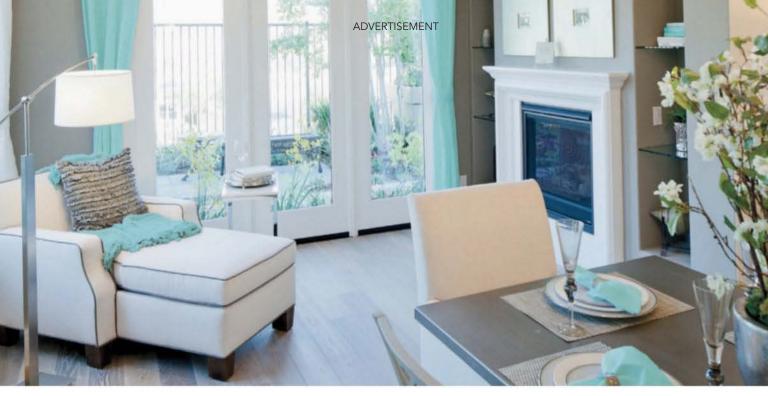

It's a color, it's an obsession, it's a...juicing trend! Juice Generation recently added detoxifying charcoal beverages ($58/6-pack; juicegeneration.com) to its lineup. Studies show that the porous carbon-based substance attracts impurities in your system, then flushes them out of your digestive tract. The benefits? Improved digestion, brighter skin, and better breath. And, surprise! This almond-milk blend, with charcoal as a top ingredient, tastes more creamy delicious than actively ashy.

GUACAMOLE WITH PISTACHIOS

Flecked with nuts gently fried in olive oil, this is not your average dip. "I love the green on green of the pistachios and avocado," says Stupak, who gets that perfect chunky texture by not overmashing the avocados (he reaches for the Hass variety for its creamy texture and superior flavor). Use a bowl with a flat bottom, such as a casserole dish, so you can be deliberate with your mixing.

SERVES 6 TOTAL TIME 20 min.

- tbsp extra-virgin olive oil
- cup unsalted pistachios, coarsely chopped Kosher salt
- Hass avocados, halved and pitted
- cup minced white onion, 1/4 rinsed and blotted dry
- jalapeños, seeded and minced
- 2 tbsp fresh lime juice
- cup chopped cilantro. plus more for garnish Tortilla chips for serving (try Xochitl brand, $14/24 oz.; amazon.com)

1 In a medium skillet, heat oil until shimmering. Add pistachios and cook, stirring until lightly toasted, about 3 min. Using a slotted spoon, transfer pistachios to paper towels to drain; reserve oil in the skillet. Season pistachios with salt. 2 Scoop avocados into a medium bowl; coarsely mash with a masher or whisk. 3 Stir in onion, jalapeños, lime juice, chopped cilantro, and all but 2 tbsp of the pistachios; season with salt. 4 Scrape guacamole into a serving bowl; drizzle some reserved oil on top. Garnish with cilantro leaves and remaining pistachios. Serve with tortilla chips.

PASSION FRUIT MARGARITA

"I always call margaritas a more-ish drink, because once you have one, you always want another," says Stupak matter-of-factly. Fresh juices elevate his popular version, and while he uses passion fruit here, you can substitute it with any acidic fruit juice: "This recipe is super-adaptable-either Meyer lemons or blood oranges would work nicely." When it comes to tequila, he prefers the taste and quality of Pueblo Viejo 104 proof ($30; zeetequila.com). Stupak also likes to dip only half of the glass rim in salt. "If someone wants to try it, they can. And if not, it gives them an out!"

SERVES 1 TOTAL TIME 10 min.

- oz. dark agave nectar 1/4
- 1/4 oz. water
- 11/2 oz. tequila blanco
- 1 oz. passion fruit juice
- oz. fresh lemon iuice 1/2
- 1/2 oz. fresh lime juice
- lime wedge Smoked sea salt (try Maldon, $8; surlatable .com), for garnish

1 Stir agave nectar and water in a cocktail shaker. Add tequila, passion fruit juice, lemon juice, and lime juice. Fill the shaker with ice and shake until well chilled, about 15 seconds. 2 Moisten half of the rim of a rocks glass with the lime wedge and dip in smoked sea salt. 3 Strain the cocktail into the rocks glass, fill with ice, and garnish with the lime wedge.

GREEN HERB RICE

Fresh parsley and vibrant green peas give this flavorful rice its colorful appeal. "I'd make it about 20 minutes before dinner so that the vegetables stay bright," says Stupak. Letting the rice stand for 10 minutes once cooked keeps the texture fluffy.

SERVES 6-8 ACTIVE TIME 30 min. TOTAL TIME 1 hour, 20 min.

- poblano chiles
- 1 small white onion, coarsely chopped
- 3 garlic cloves, sliced
- cup chicken stock or water
- 1 cup packed parsley leaves
- tsp kosher salt 2
- tbsp extra-virgin olive oil
- cups medium-grain 11/2 uncooked white rice
- 10-oz. bag frozen peas, thawed (or 2 cups fresh)

1 Preheat the broiler. Set a rack 4 inches from the heat. 2 Broil chiles on a foil-lined baking sheet, turning occasionally, until blackened all over, about 8 min. Transfer chiles to a bowl, cover with plastic wrap, and let steam for 20 min. 3 Peel and seed the chiles; transfer to a blender. 4 In a small saucepan, cover onion and garlic with water; bring to a boil. Drain and transfer to the blender. Add stock, parsley, and salt; purée until smooth. 5 Heat olive oil in a medium saucepan over moderately high heat. Add rice; cook, stirring, until lightly toasted, 5 min. Stir in purée and peas; bring to a simmer. Reduce heat to low, cover, and cook for 20 min. 6 Remove pan from heat; let stand for 10 min. Fluff with a fork before serving.

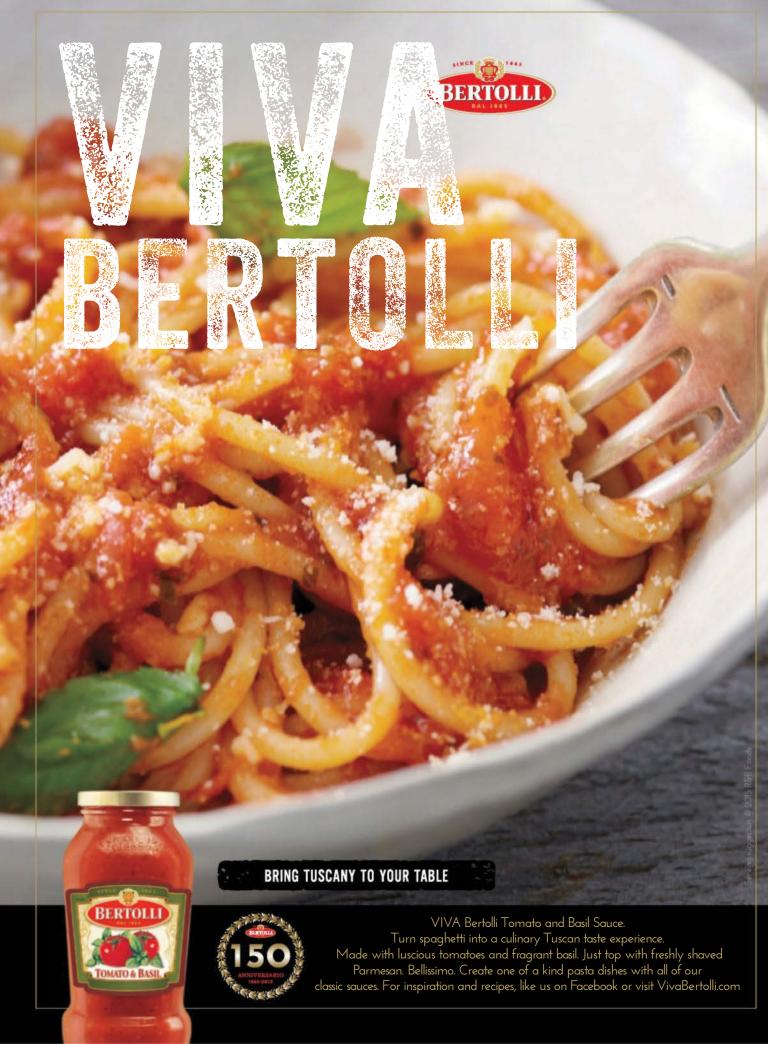

CHIPOTLE-ROASTED BABY CARROTS YOGURT. AND SESAME

Delicious and gorgeous on a plate, these caramelized, spicy-sweet carrots are surprisingly easy to make. "Baby carrots are sweeter and more tender than regular ones, and you don't need to peel them," says Stupak. "I leave on the trimmed, tender green tops; it just looks more special."

SERVES 6 ACTIVE TIME 20 min. TOTAL TIME 1 hour

- thin baby carrots (2-3 bunches), scrubbed, tops trimmed
- chipotle peppers (canned in adobo sauce), minced, plus 1 tsp sauce
- tbsp unsulfured molasses
- 2½ tbsp extra-virgin olive oil
- Salt and pepper tbsp sesame seeds Plain Greek yogurt for serving
- oz. watercress, stems discarded
- 1 Preheat oven to 350°F. 2 On a rimmed baking sheet, toss carrots with minced chipotles, molasses, and 2 tbsp olive oil; season with salt and pepper. Roast carrots for 30-35 min. until tender, crisp, and browned. Transfer carrots to a plate; let cool. 3 Meanwhile, in a skillet, toast sesame seeds over moderate heat, tossing until golden, 3-5 min. Stir in remaining 1/2 tbsp olive oil and season with salt; let cool. 4 Toss carrots with the 1 tsp adobo sauce. 5 Spread a thick layer of yogurt on a plate; top with carrots. Scatter watercress over carrots. Garnish with sesame seeds and serve with yogurt.

COCHINITA PIBIL

A pork shoulder rubbed with spices, then cooked low and slow, yields a main dish that promises to thrill (vegetarians can swap in potatoes or squash and rub them in achiote paste). When it's time to serve guests, says Stupak, "I put the pot in the center of the table with a stack of tortillas. It always tastes better when you're part of the process." He makes his own achiote paste, but if you'd prefer the ease of a store-bought marinade (try El Yucateco Achiote Liquid, $11/10 fl. oz.; amazon.com), skip steps 1-4 below.

SERVES 6-8 ACTIVE TIME 1 hour, 5 min. TOTAL TIME 4 hours, 35 min.

- cup plus 2 tbsp achiote seeds 1/4
- 2 tbsp dried oregano, preferably Mexican
- tbsp whole allspice berries
- 1½ tbsp whole black peppercorns
- 3-inch cinnamon stick
- garlic cloves (2 heads), unpeeled 30
- cup apple cider vinegar
- banana leaves (or parchment 2 paper)
- 2 lb. boneless pork shoulder Kosher salt
- corn tortillas Pickled Red Onions (recipe at right) Salsa habañero, homemade or store-bought
- lime, cut into wedges

spices to a small bowl and let cool completely. 2 Working in batches using a spice grinder (designate a coffee grinder, or use a mortar and pestle), grind spices to a fine powder. 3 Return skillet to moderate heat. Add garlic cloves and cook, turning occasionally, until blackened in spots, 6 min. Remove skillet from heat; let garlic cool. 4 Peel garlic cloves; add to a blender with ground spices and vinegar. Purée garlic to a smooth paste. 5 Preheat oven to 300°F. 6 Line a 6-quart Dutch oven with banana leaves in a cross pattern, letting the leaves fall over the sides of the pot (or use parchment paper). Place pork shoulder in the pot, and season liberally with salt. Rub 1 cup of achiote paste all over pork (reserve extra paste for another use). Fold leaves over to enclose the pork; cover casserole. 7 Bake pork for 3 hours, until tender and a knife tip inserted in center of pork comes out with no resistance. Let pork rest, covered, for 30 min. 8 Meanwhile, heat the cast-iron skillet over moderate heat for 5 min. Place 1 tortilla in skillet; cook, turning once, until lightly toasted and pliable, about 2 min. Transfer to a kitchen towel to keep warm; repeat with remaining tortillas. 9 Transfer pork to a cutting board and unwrap. Shred meat with 2 forks or coarsely chop it. Serve pork in a bowl with tortillas, pickled onions, hot sauce, and lime wedges.

PICKLED RED ONIONS

MAKES 1½ cups ACTIVE TIME 10 min. TOTAL TIME 2 hours, 10 min.

- tsp cumin seeds
- 1/4 1/4 tsp whole black peppercorns
- bay leaf
- ½ ¾ cup apple cider vinegar

FLASHBACK KATE HUDSON

Then just 21 years old, the actress jetted to Bali with a suitcase full of bikinis for our feature. When not on set, she trolled the villages for locally crafted jewelry with mom and mentor Goldie Hawn

MAY 2000

"Kate was so fun during our shoot, but she and Goldie were really there to shop," says "Bali Girl" photographer Matthew Rolston of the star, who turns 36 this month. "Every day after we wrapped, Goldie would meet up with us, wearing yet another unbelievable new cocktail ring. We all joked that the two of them should just move into the hotel gift shop!" Beyond sharing island splurges, he says, "Kate was lucky to have Goldie guide her through the wilds of life in the spotlight."
